

PERSHING PREPARES FOR ARMY

AMERICAN GENERAL TAKES UP WORK OF PREPARING FOR ARRIVAL OF AMERICAN FORCES.

MANY SEEK TRANSFER

Americans in Foreign Legions Seek Enlistment or Commissions in Our Expeditionary Force.

Paris, June 16.—As the guest of France, in which extraordinary honors were bestowed upon him, Major General Pershing today plunged into the work of preparing for the arrival and disposition of the American military forces he is to command. Early this morning he took for his hotel the strange apartment of documents of the new American army headquarters in the Rue de Constantine, near the Hotel Des Invalides. He sat for the first time at the plain table in the barely furnished office and took up the great volume of business that has been accumulating before and since his arrival. General Pershing found in his mail numerous requests from Americans serving in the armies of the allies to be transferred to the American army in France.

Many American civilians in France have made application to enlist or for commissions. The general is strictly guided by the war department's decision not to request the transfer of Americans from the foreign legion or from the English or Canadian armies, except for work in the American army as instructors or in other specialized capacities.

Consequently most of the Americans now serving with other armies will remain with them. General Pershing motored to the French general headquarters and took lunch with General Petain, French commander, whom he had not met before.

The Marquis de Chambrun, descendant of Marquis de La Fayette was chosen to return formal thanks today when General Pershing laid a wreath on the grave of the famous revolutionary general. The marquis said in part:

"In your person, general, I bow before the sword which America casts into the scale for liberty, civilization and humanity."

General Pershing replied:

"It is a great pleasure for all us Americans to have had this opportunity of visiting the grave of a man who ty of visiting the grave of a soldier who did so much for America. We are happy thus to pay our tribute, and feel more closely the bonds which have existed between our two nations."

General Pershing will lunch tomorrow with General Petain at grand headquarters and probably will attend a special performance at the Opera Comique.

Wilson's Address Popular.

President Wilson's Flag Day address has made a profound impression on France. No public speech since the beginning of the war has so readily touched French imagination. It completes the effect of the arrival of General Pershing in bringing to the public mind a full realization of what America's aid means, and like a breath of fresh air reinvigorates and stiffens the army and people in he determination to struggle to a victory, now more than ever certain.

All the newspapers print the speech verbatim under double column headings, and the most salient passages appear in leaded capitals.

French Repulse Raids.

Paris, June 16.—The French re-conducted several raids in region of Hill 64, on the heights of the Meuse, last night, according to today's war office statement. The artillery fire around Craonne and Mont Carnillet was lively.

London, June 16.—Repulse of a German attack on the position captured by the British south of the pres-Comines canal was announced today by the war office.

WISCONSIN PROVES ABSOLUTE LOYALTY

RECORD ON REGISTRATION AND LIBERTY LOAN WIPES OUT PRO-GERMAN SMIRCH.

A REPLY TO DEFAMERS

Citizens Assert Themselves in Answer to Brevity Interests and False Representation.

By Ellis B. Usher.
Milwaukee, June 15.—The events of the week, locally, have been important but not exciting. The registration for war was so satisfactory as to surprise some people who never learn that certain facts govern results in Wisconsin. Such people do not learn that the only reason Wisconsin's loyalty has ever been questioned is that she has been loyal and persistently misrepresented by the German-American Alliance; by the brewers and liquor interests generally; by a few treasonable newspapers; and worse than all, by her men in public life, a majority of whom have unfortunately been selected by the combination of sinister interests to make the public believe that these interests are gradually being understood, as their co-operation becomes more and more apparent, and no one is doing more, I had almost as much to make the public believe that some of the Republican leaders of the state who have been humiliated by the realization that they were being used last fall by these interests, are making splendid amends and the people who followed them last year are following them now in support of the president and the cause of freedom for the world.

When Milwaukee gave 10,000 plurality for Wilson it ought to have been a sufficient notice to the country that the simple terms—loyalty and disloyalty. The elements opposed to the government are organized. They showed that last year, Republican leaders know now the full measure of their plot. The conspirators have therefore abandoned all subterfuge and are announcing that they are going to support the Socialist party. That group has long drawn its sustenance from them. The first move has been made. All Americans that remained have either been expelled or have been made to understand that the Socialist party demands opposition to the government as a cardinal test. This elimination began last year, with the result that instead of polling a million votes, as was claimed in advance, the Socialist vote shrank to an insignificant 600,000.

It will be necessary for men who want any government in this country to take note of these rapidly suggested outlines of the continuing conspiracy against all government, and in the midst of us right here in Wisconsin. To meet it and retire our misrepresentatives in Washington and Madison will under our primary system, need early organization and courage and continued vigilance until the polls close in the fall of 1918. We have frequently in recent years demonstrated that a wise and patriotic citizen can be divided and defeated by multiplying candidates. The only way to defeat that method of befouling our politics is to meet it in the open with exposure and the denunciation of its methods. If there are not patriotic and courageous Americans enough in this state to lead that sort of a fight, we will serve the continuance of the kind of state government and the sort of despicable majority representation in congress that we now have. There are patriots enough if they will organize and act, but they must act at once. There is no time to waste. There is nothing of partisanship involved. The sole question is, shall Wisconsin be taken out of the hands of those who disgrace her?

To look at greater things and hopeful things a moment; it is inspiring that we have had our registration here in Wisconsin with few slackers and many arrests. We stand high among the states with a record of exceeding our quota in registration. We have made an excellent record for Liberty Bond subscriptions and the great two billion loan is oversubscribed here as well as nationally. Now Wisconsin is opening her part of a campaign to raise a million dollars for the Red Cross, and the biggest financiers in this city and the state are in charge. There's nothing the matter with Wisconsin when the people speak for themselves.

Milwaukee will have a complete registration of every alien German because of those who were not reached by the draft registration have had to register and get permits to live and work in the city and in several of its suburbs. The government's restrictions against residence within half a mile of munition and other works, or within half a mile of a lighthouse, or government building, etc., are being enforced. The government is not a permit from the United States marshal.

It should be of interest to Wisconsin, and especially to the eastern part of the state, to know that despite the poor-poor campaign of our northwestern Wisconsin newspaper, there may be demonstrated to have great value for the movement of freight. Col. Townsend of the Second Reserve Engineer corps, with headquarters at Louisville, is to assemble a fleet of twenty-four government barges and tug boats enough to tow them. This fleet will take over 15,000 tons of coal to St. Paul, and return 24,000 tons of iron ore from the Mesaba range. This experimental undertaking comes about with the co-operation of the government, the steamboat interests and the Mississippi Valley iron company, whose plant is at St. Louis. The grain and iron interests of the upper Mississippi have been for some time mortgaging at the railroads and the great trunk lines the right of way. It will be recalled in this connection that the late James J. Hill had breadth enough eight years ago, notwithstanding his great railroad improvement, to have a conclusive reason that he was that the railroads could not expand fast enough to keep pace with the growth of the country; that their resources would be taxed to move the commercial freight, and that the great bulk freight, raw materials, wheat, corn, coal and iron, must move mainly by water, where cheapness would amply compensate for lack of speed. If war should demonstrate that value of interior waterways, and it will if honestly tried, it will repay all its money costs, without going beyond the benefits to the country lying between the Alleghenies and the Rockies. No state in the union is more vitally interested in such a development than Wisconsin, but in this, as in most other respects, she is misrepresented in Washington. Such use of the Mississippi would at once call the Fox and Wisconsin improvement into action. That route could be canalized from Green Bay to the Mississippi for a comparatively small sum. Gen. Warren said back in the seventies, that it could be done for ten millions of dollars.

(By Paul Holmes.)
L'Verne stood motionless for a moment upon the brink of the precipice, and as he peered downward the impression of surprise and bewilderment upon his face changed to one of grim determination, for he discerned at something which he had seen at first glance, and which was of tremendous importance.

A motor car bore the insignia of the royal house of Russia! He appreciated at once the full meaning of this fact, and prepared to act immediately. No, but the Czar rides under the protection of the imperial coat of arms.

He smiled slightly as he presented the facts to himself. Truly, he was working under the favor of Fortune. Nonetheless, the boy made his way down the steep slope, and a moment later, with revolver drawn and ready for use, he confronted the surprised inmate of the car.

"Not a sound," he whispered fiercely. "Keep still!" The man, apparently frightened into submission, threw up his hands, but as he did so, a loud, vibrant sound issued from the car. Francois realized instantly that the fellow had managed to push the button controlling the electric horn with his knee, and saw that he was at the same time reaching for a weapon. He acted quickly.

Before the desperate chauffeur could draw a weapon, L'Verne had, not daring to risk a shot, flung his revolver straight at the man's head. The missile went true to its mark, and the butt of the gun cut a great gash in the fellow's forehead. L'Verne leaped into the car an instant later and finding his adversary unconscious, he bound him securely and placed him in the back seat.

There was no time to lose. L'Verne was in undisputed possession of the Czar's touring car, but he could not stop with that. One fact was predominant in his mind. The car was evidently waiting for someone, and who would ride in it except the Czar or his family? L'Verne knew that within the city gates the revolution was already in progress, and he deemed it likely that the Czar had fled the city too dangerous for him, and was making plans for a hurried escape. That he and his party would arrive at any moment, Francois thought likely, and he looked about him to see by what means his arrival would be made.

The depression in which the car rested had three very steep sides, and one which was but a gradual incline from the level of the ground, up which the motor could very easily make its way. And now, as Francois surveyed his new surroundings more closely, he perceived a door in one of the steep sides. The idea of an underground passage out of the city from the Czar's palace at once suggested itself to him. He leaped from the car, and went over to this door. Upon trying the knob, he discovered that it was locked, but he saw, also, that the hinges had been newly oiled. His next act was to search the body of the chauffeur thoroughly, and to his delight he found a bunch of keys. One after another he tried them in the lock, and the fifth key turned the bolt. The great iron door swung inward, and Francois stepped into the secret passage.

For perhaps half an hour he made his way along the unlighted passage, and he was beginning to think that he was following up a wrong trail when a sudden glimmer of light showed itself through the darkness. L'Verne flattened himself against the wall, and as he did so, he heard footsteps.

The footsteps drew nearer and nearer, and presently voices became audible. Francois easily recognized the voice of the speaker. It was that of General Ivanoff, the Czar's traitorous but nevertheless chief of staff.

"There is but one thing to do now," came the words of the crafty leader, and then L'Verne heard the weakly interrogative tones of the Czar himself, inquiring what this was.

"Open up the Divine front," was Ivanoff's brazen reply. "The German army can now alone restore your throne. An order to Brusiloff and he will sweep his army aside to let the Germans march to Petrograd. It is your only chance to retain your empire."

His blood boiling, L'Verne sprang from his hiding place, and confronted the royal party.

"The Czar is at least a patriot," he cried. He had stalked all upon an appeal to the patriotism of the Czar, and a short hour before, he had been almost convinced that he would never be able to secure an interview with Russia's ruler. But now, Fortune had given him everything he could have asked for. Here was the Czar, fleeing from his own people. The revolution was an actuality, almost a success already.

What better opportunity could he have had to present his case to the "White Feather"? By the favor of Fortune, he had been given a chance to succeed.

"Back," he cried to the companions of the Czar who were crowding into him, and he flourished his revolver with the word. "Back! I have business with the Emperor. I am Francois L'Verne."

The name sent them cowering back, for all of them had heard wonderful tales of the marksmanship of this remarkable Frenchman. With contempt in his eyes, Francois watched them for a moment, and then he turned to Nicholas, who was regarding him with an uncomprehending expression.

"Nicholas II," he said, "Emperor of all the Russians. I have something to say to you. The people of Russia have revolted against your government, and for the time have taken you from your throne. You have not governed Russia wisely, and you know it, but being proved unworthy to rule does not take away from you the right to be a Russian. Are you still a patriot, O Nicholas? For no Russian would see his country overrun by soldiers of a nation he hates, and no patriot would place his nation under the domination of the Prussians for the sake of holding one's place in a throne which would then be a throne in name only."

Threatening and protesting, Ivanoff was approaching the pair, but with a flourish of his revolver, Francois sent him back to his associates who had been listening to his words with terror in their hearts. "This man has just urged you to leave your country," cried L'Verne.

"but you know that only traitors betray their countries. Where has there been a Romanoff who was a traitor? Nicholas, who should love a country better than one who has ruled that country? You know that for more than two decades you have failed to rule Russia, as it should have been ruled, but who should wish to see a country well governed more than one who has tried to govern that country and failed? Who should wish to see his country prosper more than one who has for twenty years shaped the destinies of that country, and who should be more willing than such a man, when seeing that his presence as ruler blocks the way to a better and a more equal government, to step aside for the sake of his country. You are a Romanoff, O Nicholas, but you are a Russian just the same. You have been guided by selfish and greedy ministers, who have, by reason of their avarice and their alien sympathies, made your reign a failure, but, Nicholas, believe—"

L'Verne's voice trailed to a soft whisper—"believe that this revolt is against them, not against you, but because you stand in front of them and represent them to the masses, you must fall with them. Take this choice, O Romanoff, either a new Russia, governed by Russians who have the good of Russia at heart, or an autocratic Russia, with yourself as nominal head, but behind you and above you, Germany, under the dictatorship of the German Kaiser, and—"

With a gesture of resignation, the Czar raised his hand. "Enough," he said. His voice was strangely even and calm, as he went on, and there was a pitiful note of melancholy in it which spoke of the tragedy just enacted within his soul. "Enough, L'Verne. I submit, for I realize the truth of your words. First you tore from my side, Saint Rasputin, the only true friend I ever had in all the world, and now—now you take away my throne. Come with me—I will abdicate."

A jump rose in L'Verne's throat as he followed the Czar of all the Russians back along the passageway to the palace. He felt almost like sobbing, for the few brief words of the Emperor had changed his fierce joy of a hard won victory to pity and compassion. He had won his mighty fight, but there was something lacking to which he could not reconcile himself. The true sorrow he had brought to this man had robbed him of all the exultation of the conqueror.

At midnight that night, Nicholas II. abdicated his throne for himself and for all lineal claimants. Present at the abdication were four men, Michael Rodzianko, Prince Felix Uspoff, Prof. N. Milukoff, and Francois L'Verne, but there was still one other.

Standing by his father's side, his face blank and lacking all signs of intelligence, the little Grand Duke Alexis, the Czar's son, watched Nicholas sign the paper which would forever prevent him from sitting upon the throne of Russia.

The story is told. It ended with the abdication of the Czar, and the success of the Russian revolution. The new government was formed quickly and because it was truly Russian, it weathered the storms and the dangers which in the near future came near to shaking it from its feet. L'Verne's appeal, his wonderful speech which gave freedom to Russia, had stirred Nicholas Romanoff to the heart, and he retired to private life without a murmur.

Yes, the Duma rewarded L'Verne. They rewarded him because they thought he made his way to General Brusiloff and delivered to him a message from Rodzianko. Could they have known what he had really done, no reward could have been great enough, not even the throne itself.

Francois alone knew the true magnitude of his services, for without him, the success of the revolt would not have been possible. He modestly held his tongue while the populace shouted its approval for deeds less great, and when the crisis was over, and the storm was past, he went back to France.

(THE END.)

Temperance Talks

Wyoming and the Liquor Traffic.
Wyoming has been a wet state so long that its liberal policy with respect to the liquor traffic is now producing results.

According to the report of the Wyoming State Superintendent of Public Instruction for the biennial year 1915-1916 there were 212 undergraduates in the state university, including special students. The report of the warden of the state penitentiary showed that there were received at that institution during the same biennial period 337 convicts, of which number it was estimated ninety per cent or 303 were sent there because of drink. In other words, while the fathers and mothers in the State of Wyoming sent 212 youngsters to the state university the licensed saloons of that state sent 303 victims, mostly young men, to the state penitentiary.

It was a race between the state penitentiary and the state university under the saloon system and the penitentiary won. It is scarcely to be wondered at that the better class of people in Wyoming are becoming tired of that sort of thing and it is to be hoped that they will put the saloon out of commission and give the state university a better chance.

DEPENDENTS OF CANADIANS CANNOT LEAVE ENGLAND

London, June 16.—There are 40,000 dependents of Canadian soldiers in this country unable to return to Canada owing to the lack of passenger accommodation on the few steamers running to Canada. They came soon after their men folk when the latter enlisted and, in some cases, the men already have returned to Canada wounded or discharged from the army. Others were relatives of soldiers who have been killed and are anxious to return to relatives.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT.

The Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian Association are two adjuncts of the army which depend for support on the philanthropy of the people. The mission of both is too important to be neglected.

The work of the Red Cross society is to care for the wounded and suffering and the courage and heroism displayed is not surpassed by the men at the front.

The society furnishes physicians, surgeons and nurses for the base hospitals, which are never far from the firing line, as well as an ambulance corps, engaged in the dangerous work of removing the wounded from the trenches and battlefields.

The last issue of the Red Cross magazine contains the diary of Greenville Temple Kooch, a member of section No. 8 of the American ambulance corps during last summer, the final attacks and defense of Verdun.

"Greenville" is a smooth-faced boy of about twenty. His diary is more thrilling than any romance because it is the story of experiences which came to him day after day in the midst of one of the most terrible battles ever fought. The diary is full of tales and for a month he and fifteen other drivers were busy night and day picking up the wounded and transferring them to the field hospitals.

On the 25th of last June he was wounded, while making his last trip. The graphic account of his experience follows.

"This has certainly been a memorable day for me, and one which I feel quite sure I will never forget. At 1:00 a. m. I got up and started for Fort Tanneau. The firing when I left Dugay was terrible. All the hills to the distance were as bright as day. For the first three or four miles of the run, everything went along beautifully. However, when I realized that I had disturbed things immediately I slowed up. The whole road was alive with breaking shells, and the noise was terrible. Shells burst within fifty yards of my car many times, and threw stones and gravel all over me. I, of course, was a little nervous because, as I was absolutely alone in the car, I knew that I would be helpless if anything should happen. Just as I was thinking about this, something did happen. There was a loud explosion just to the left of the road, and right beside my car. I heard pieces strike my car behind me, and immediately put on all the speed I had, hoping to get out of this particular place as quickly as possible. It all happened in a few seconds. I felt a sharp pain in my arm, then I felt very faint, and I realized what had happened. My car was in the ditch. I got out quickly and saw that my arm was hit in two separate places. Right beside my car was a French soldier, who had been struck at the same time. He had a piece of shell in his neck. I managed to get my car out of the ditch, but as I was feeling very weak, I turned around rather than try to get to the fort. I got the Frenchman into the seat beside me, and we started back for Dugay. The shells were still whistling and exploding on all sides of us, and I expected to be hit again at any moment. My arm did not really begin to pain for nearly ten minutes. Then, however, it began to hurt, and I couldn't sit still in my seat. The car was going all over the road, and with my one arm, it was very hard work to keep going. To make things worse, the man beside me was moaning and groaning in a terrible way.

"When we were within half a mile of our main base, the old car took a swerve, and into the ditch it went. I saw that it was quite useless to try to get it out again, because it was nearly lying on its side. I got out, climbed out and, with the other man half hanging around my neck, started to walk. That was a walk that will not be quickly forgotten by either of us. However, after nearly half an hour we got there. We were both covered with blood and dirt. Mr. Mason happened to be standing at the door. He called for Dr. Gros and Captain Andrews, who luckily were sleeping upstairs. He fix us up. Dr. Gros bandaged us up and then I lay down to try to get some sleep. It was, however, light by this time and sleep was impossible, so I just sat around the bureau until every one was up. Dr. Gros then brought me up to the little dressing station in Dugay, where they put on bandages to last until I arrived at Paris. Mr. Mason brought me to Barle-Duc in his car, and I caught the 10 a. m. hospital train for Paris, where I arrived after an uneventful trip at 2:30 p. m. I got a taxi and went up to Noilly. They knew that I was coming and immediately brought me into the operating room and gave me gas. They removed a little piece which was stuck in my arm, and put drains through the two holes. I then went up and rolled into bed in one of the wards, and it didn't take long to get to sleep. It was the first time in more than a month that I had been in bed, or between sheets, and I tell you I felt fine."

This is only one of thousands of such experiences, many of which will never be written. The brave boys in the Red Cross service are doing valiant work for humanity. "Greenville" recovered from his wounds and is back again at the front.

America has been well represented in the Red Cross service in France for the past two years, and now that our own boys are going to the front, the force will be largely increased. Red Cross workers are found in every village and hamlet all over the land, and the cities respond freely to this call for aid.

The society needs money as well as supplies, and this must come as a voluntary offering. It should be furnished cheerfully and gratefully for the cause is most worthy.

The work of the Y. M. C. A. in the army, while along different lines, is a work of great importance. It is the one link between home life and army life, and has in it the moral and physical life of the soldier.

The turning point in a boy's life is usually when he leaves home, but it rarely happens that an army of boys leave home at the same time. This is what is happening today, and the change is so radical that some helpful influence is necessary to hold the boys steady while the transformation is going on.

This is what the Y. M. C. A. provides through reading rooms and writing rooms, in training camps and at army headquarters, as well as at the front. The discipline of army life may be ever so rigid, and yet it is more or less demoralizing from a moral standpoint. This fact has always been recognized, and so the work of the Y. M. C. A. has long been considered of great value in the army. We want our boys to come back to us free from the contaminating influences of a life which at the best is a shock to sensibilities. We want the best that is in them to have a chance to develop.

The world will be slow to recover from the physical effects of the war. Many nations will be crippled for years to come, not only physically, but also mentally. A generation of young men has been wiped out, and the end is not yet. Multitudes of homes have been desolated and a great army of widows and orphans are left to mourn. The old world is already full of the maimed, the halt and the blind, wrecks of humanity sacrificed to the demon of war.

But the thing which will linger the longest, and which will be a world for a long time to come, is the demoralizing influence which this mad war exerts. Men have become demons incarnate. The slaughter of innocent women and children is of common occurrence. Moral obligations are no longer recognized. The world has lost its ideals and barbarism is rapidly taking the place of civility.

The American nation stands at the threshold of this unholy thing called war. The flower of the nation is ready to actively engage. It remains to be seen whether we shall descend to the level of the old world, where human life is the cheapest thing in existence, and where human rights are trampled in the dust.

We can not follow our boys through the hard experiences of camp and army life, but the Y. M. C. A. can, and is already preparing for the work. This organization is the best possible representative that the home can have. Its heart is in the work and it renders intelligent and loving service. This great work which the Y. M. C. A. is performing for your boy and mine, is a work of phantasmagoria and simple. Its success depends upon your appreciation and mine, for the money to carry it on must come through voluntary channels.

The Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. represent the saving influences of this ungodly strife. We can't do less than uphold their hands while they do the work. Don't you think?

FOOTVILLE

Footville, June 15.—Clarence Owen on Thursday took his departure for the front. He was accompanied by his wife and two boys, who for had, hoping to get out of this particular place as quickly as possible. It all happened in a few seconds. Resume of the Week's Program of Moving Pictures

By Mrs. Abbie Helms.

The matinee on last Saturday of the week was "The Dark and Stormy Night" at the Majestic. Many children were in attendance and enjoyed the film. On Sunday Peggy Hyland, in "The Right to Live," took the part of a young village girl who mothered her orphaned brothers and sisters, who were orphaned and homeless. A mercenary uncle, who wanted to be mayor, and other characters of the village are brought in, and the whole is pathetic, humorous and entirely human. The children were especially interested in the story, and the "Dollar and the Law" were very wholesome, and an interesting story of a dollar bill, from the time it was being printed in Washington until it helped to find the man who committed a murder, was shown. The tale was thrilling in itself and the scenes at the treasury department were most instructive. The Beverly had Alice Brady on Sunday in "Maternity." The theme of the story was the dread of a young wife of the ordeal of motherhood, as the women of her family had all died at that time. The subject was treated with restraint and a certain amount of poetic beauty, but it was not at all appropriate for a Sunday audience to make up as it is of many children and young people. On Wednesday "The Badge of Shame," in which Clara Kimball Young appeared in an emotional character, was a story of the misadventure and ill treatment of the Jews of Kiev. Her family were nearly all killed by the Russian peasants and she was ordered to leave the city. To the allowed to remain, that she might finish her musical education, she took out a permit to do so as an immoral woman, shielded as they are by the village of the Jews. She and her uncle finally came to America, and beautiful scenes of the harbor of New York are shown. Her later happiness is only reached by the disclosure of this "badge of shame."

The Myers on Saturday and Sunday had as its picture offering "The Perils of the Secret Service," which was a story of a band of anarchists to poison the supply of a great city by means of a tube of germs of a plague. The scene of this tube formed the thrilling events of the story. On Tuesday and Wednesday the very interesting and unusual picture, taken by submarine photography, illustrating "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," was shown. The characters in Jules Verne's story were well taken and the incidents of the tale were brought out in detail. The submarine gains, the swimming of the sharks and the other fish around the boat, and the submarine itself, were most interesting and instructive. The battle between the octopus and the pearl diver, and the man and the shark, were certainly unique specimens of the art. "Defense or Tribute," on Monday, was a thrilling military play and was seen by a large crowd.

The Apollo had another of the clever Beatrice Fairfax stories for Sunday, in addition to its vaudeville. This film had to do with a jealous husband and her plans to find out the affairs of her husband. On Monday Jack Pickford was seen in "The Girl at Home," a play taking in the amusing adventures of a young person away at school. Jack has all the youthful, ingenious ways of his famous sister, and he is steadily growing into the artistic finish which characterizes her. On Wednesday Marie Doro appeared in a pleasing story play where her courage and ingenuity were put to the test in difficult situations. She had a new leading man, but he splendidly made up for the interest in his share of the work. Miss Doro is vivacious and charming in all she undertakes. On Thursday a southern story, entitled "The Colors," it had to do with a small boy carried away from a southern plantation in a boat, and drifting to the north. He was found and met his father in battle, fighting on the other side.

On Wednesday Marie Doro appeared in a pleasing story play where her courage and ingenuity were put to the test in difficult situations. She had a new leading man, but he splendidly made up for the interest in his share of the work. Miss Doro is vivacious and charming in all she undertakes. On Thursday a southern story, entitled "The Colors," it had to do with a small boy carried away from a southern plantation in a boat, and drifting to the north. He was found and met his father in battle, fighting on the other side.

The Apollo had another of the clever Beatrice Fairfax stories for Sunday, in addition to its vaudeville. This film had to do with a jealous husband and her plans to find out the affairs of her husband. On Monday Jack Pickford was seen in "The Girl at Home," a play taking in the amusing adventures of a young person away at school. Jack has all the youthful, ingenious ways of his famous sister, and he is steadily growing into the artistic finish which characterizes her. News Notes from Movieland

BY DAISY DEAN

House Peters, whose newest picture, "Heir of the Ages," is to be released this month, enjoys the distinction of being one of the best portrayals of dramatic situations in fiction. He is known as a traveler, too, having toured England, Australia, Africa, and India. But he likes America best. Peters appeared in legitimate drama before coming to the screen. He played in "Every Woman" in New York; then spent a year on the road in "Bough and Paid For," then played for some time in Chicago in "The Money Moon."

His debut in motion pictures was with no less a personage than Mary Pickford in "The Bishop's Carriage." Among other plays were "Clothes," "The Ride of Perich," "The Brute," "Salome Jane," "The Girl of the Golden West," "The Warrens of Virginia," "Captivity," and "Stolen Goods."

SHRDL SHRDL SHRDL ETA HS After signing up with Triangle, he took the leading roles in "Winged Idol" and "Between Men," after which he went to Lubin to play in "The Great Divide."

His first picture with his next connection was "The Hand of Peril," followed by "The Closed Road."

A MOVIE AUDIENCE IN LONDON

The enthusiastic chronicler of film events in dear old London cannot be accused of exaggeration when he writes that the "small and select" gallery was present at the screening of "Intolerance." The said "small and select" consisted merely of the king and queen, princesses, Prince George, Princess Victoria, Princess Royal, Princess Maud and Princess Christian. After the affair D. Ward Griffith, the director, was received in the royal box.

"Great stuff," said the king. "Stunning," echoed the queen.

With her change of company Mary MacLaren has changed her name, so now instead of its being Mary MacLaren, it's Mary MacDonald. Her first picture for the new corporation will be "The Daughter of the Well Dressed Poor."

It is said that "The Immigrant," Charlie Chaplin's next release, hosts more to produce than any other Chaplin comedy, as a larger company is employed and a far larger range of location.

A man of the name of Julius Steger says he considers Evelyn Nesbit the foremost dramatic star of the screen. This may be accepted as a thoroughly impartial analysis, inasmuch as Steger is connected with the Nesbit pictures only as producer and general manager. Evelyn's first picture was "Redemption." She's to make a number of others.

Madame Schumann-Heink and Ruth Chatterton visited Universal City recently and posed with the lions. The madame insisted on posing with an infant lion. "There's nothing like starting 'em young in this posing stuff," says she.

Grace Cunard has recovered from her rather serious operation. It will be some time, however, before Miss Cunard will be able to return to work.

deck in his field and Manager Cole will be in one of the plots. In addition to this list are several youngsters to be brought along by the regulars. The game is scheduled to start at 2:15.

CARDS VS. JEFFERSON TOMORROW; BIG LIST OF NEW MEN HERE

Fast Game Foreseen With New Players on Local Team—Ex-Box Hurler on Mound for Janesville

The chesty Jefferson tribe clashes with the Cardinals at the driving post tomorrow according to Press. W. P. Langdon and Manager Willis Cole this afternoon the Cards are going to come out on top.

A total of fifteen players will be on hand in Card uniforms and if a regular team is not available from this number then it will not be the fault of either Cole or Langdon. Since Wednesday they have been coming to the country for a number of new men.

The big handicap is the league ruling that only a hundred dollars can be spent for players for any one game. Lots of crack baseball artists are available but when it comes to paying them eight or ten dollars and expenses it is an impossibility to bring them here.

Cole and Langdon have secured Sox hurler and at present a leading pitcher for the Janesville crew tomorrow. "Viecher" Delaney, the best semi-pro catcher in Chicago will be on the target end. Opposing them will be "Big Ben" Benn and Owens.

Cole and Langdon have secured Knight a Vaupian player from Tri-county league to play first. Knight has a reputation of being a shifty lad around the right hand corner and at the bat and he gets his share of hits, heavy ones at that. Kingston will start at short and there is a new man to be on hand for a tryout in this position.

There are a couple of candidates for second but Goodman will be used at the start. Similar conditions exist at third. Kernan will open at this sack however.

Joe Ryan will be home and will get a chance. Eberts, a Three I leaguer, is coming out. He is a fielder. Burdick, the new man who played last week will be used as an outer garden if necessary. Meyers will also be on House Peters.

It shows a sub-sea boat attacking a merchantman and being driven off by an U. S. warship. The models are propelled by their own power and every maneuver is shown during the naval battle.

"The Darkness and Dawn attraction is a potpourri of mystery and music and deals principally with Egyptian mythology. It is the story of the finding of the infant Moses and is very well staged and presented. A series of clever tableaux vivants helps to round out the performance.

"The Follies of Life is another attraction that borders on the super-sensational for here Mlle. Marie, the 'Girl who Dares,' drives a racing car at breakneck speed around a perfectly perpendicular wall, defying death at every performance.

The shows will arrive Sunday over the Northwestern railway from Kankakee and

Heart and Home Problems

LETTERS MAY BE ADDRESSED TO MRS. THOMPSON, IN CARE OF THE GAZETTE

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am an unmarried woman of thirty-five years. When I was a girl of eighteen, a young minister came to our church and preached there several years. He was married and had a little girl who was not well. His wife was not a bit good looking and she nagged all the time and criticized her. None of the girls at church liked her, but all of them liked him.

He always liked me especially well. I am sure, although he never said so. He just seemed to realize that I sympathized with his views, and he often said that he knew I would be a fine woman.

I went away for a year when I was twenty-two and when I got back my minister was gone. I felt terribly at first, but of course I had to make the best of it and I went to church just as faithfully as ever. I knew I would have been dreaming about him a great deal, and he always seems to be sick and in trouble in my dreams and wants me to go to him. He would be about forty-three years old now, I don't know where he is and I have not been able to find him.

Do you believe that dreams are prophetic? Do you think that he really sick and in trouble and does that to me? I don't know what to make of my dreams, and they worry me terribly because I care more for this minister than I have ever cared for another man.

Some people claim that dreams are prophetic, but I have never had one proved to my satisfaction that they are. Probably you have never given up thinking of the minister and caring for him, which is of course unfortunate. In your thoughts you picture him sick or in some kind of trouble and then you go to help him, isn't it so? This is only natural; when a woman loves a man she thinks of the things she can do for him to prove her devotion. Dreams are the result of thought and experiences of the waking hours.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a girl of twenty-five. I have a sister and a mother. My father is dead and my mother has barely enough to live on. I am sending my sister through a commercial school. She is very anxious to give her money and then she spends money on picture shows and ice cream just because she hasn't other things to do. I wouldn't mind if she spent money foolishly just once in a while; she spends about a dollar and a half more that she needs every week. This may not seem like so much, but it is a very serious matter to me, when I have so little myself that I often have to go without dinner.

I have explained to her how much I need the money, and it doesn't seem to do her any good. She spends what she has and I can't bear to have her cry as she does when I refuse to give her more. What do you think I ought to do to make her feel a little more responsible?

BIG SIS.

Pay your sister's tuition and give her an allowance each week. If you let her exceed her allowance and for it you are hurting her character. Instead of making her a kind of a slave by humoring her, you are making her weak and irresponsible. It is time now that she learns the value of money. If she spends foolishly and has nothing left she should go about lunching to pay for it. For the sake of her character, be firm in dealing with her, even though you may seem hard to her.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) While at a friend's house the other day a boy kissed me. I could not prevent him. What should I have done? (2) Would it be proper for four boys and girls to go to a picnic unchaperoned? We are fifteen years old. (3) Not knowing the circumstances I cannot say what you should have done. Be reserved toward the boy in the future, and show him that he misunderstood the kind of a girl you are. (4) You are too young to go unchaperoned.

Taking Stock.

Springtime is with us—in other words the time of housecleaning, the time when one finds out what is in one's drawers and what has gotten tucked away in one's closet and cupboards and gloryholes, during the year.

Women who so arrange their work that they never have to do any special cleaning (they really do not know how to do it) are a good deal suspected to live in small houses and have no families to speak of. It is a kind of domestic stock-taking, and as such has its place in the scheme of things. Which brings me to the analogy I want to draw. Why wouldn't the spring also be a good time for a stock taking in character? It is a most interesting book for the ambitious woman in business, which includes a self-analysis chart which employers are supposed to mark themselves in the various subjects and then to mark themselves.

Community Treatment of Malaria

There are vast sections of the country where the malaria-carrying breed of mosquito is not found, and hence no one ever acquires malaria in such sections. A diagnosis of malaria is never certain unless a specimen of the patient's blood, by microscopic examination of a smear of fresh blood. A great many instances of septic infection, pulmonary tuberculosis, typhoid fever, syphilis and other germ diseases are still ignorantly termed malaria or fever-and-ague in sections of malaria-free communities where the habit of using the microscope prevails in direct ratio with the cheapness and the low intelligence of the population. The higher the intelligence of a people, the greater value do they set upon skillful medical services.

There are a few scientific and practical truths about malaria:

1. Quinine kills the adult plasmodium in the red corpuscles of the blood.
2. Quinine does not kill the plasmodium in spore form.
3. Quinine will prevent spores from developing into adult plasmodia.
4. Quinine, if taken continuously, constantly keeps malaria spores in the body—preserves them.
5. Quinine must be absorbed into the blood in order to be effective.
6. Quinine must be kept constantly in the blood for at least forty-eight hours in order to kill all plasmodia of the one, two or three day type of malaria.
7. Quinine taken by mouth will not be entirely eliminated in three hours.
8. Hence quinine must be given NIGHT AND DAY at sufficiently short intervals to keep fresh quinine in the blood continuously for 48 hours.
9. The alimentary canal must be in a suitable condition to absorb the quinine.
10. The quinine should be interrupted, after the forty-eight hour course, long enough to permit the malaria spores to develop into adult plasmodia.
11. A doctor should supervise the treatment.

Dr. Ochsner offers the following rules for the community treatment of malaria based upon the above facts:

1. Exclusive diet of hot soup for ten days' treatment.
2. Two ounces of castor oil in fruit juice the evening of first day.
3. Two grain capsules of quinine bisphosphate at 8 a. m. the second day, with cover removed, followed by half-pint of hot water, every two hours, day and night for thirty doses, never missing a dose—the patient must be roused at night.
4. The following five days and six nights no quinine.
5. The evening of the fifth day repeat the castor oil.
6. At 8 a. m. following the sixth day, take another source of thirty doses of quinine just as before.

Add Health Talks

People who expect to live in a malarious district would do well to preserve this article and apply the rules to rid themselves and friends of malaria. Of corresponding of all doors and windows, and oiling or draining of stagnant bodies of water, and looking well to the emptying of any little collection of stagnant water in old cans, eaves, and the like about the place of residence, should always be attended to. An old tomato can under the weeds in the back yard or in your neighbor's garden may harbor the breeding place of malaria-carrying mosquitoes.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Nasal Troubles Affecting the Eyes

Will you kindly inform me whether polyp in the nose affects the eyes.

Yours for beautiful hair,
Herpicide Mary

had a polyp removed a year ago and now feel as if another is growing. My eyes trouble me a great deal. Several changes of glasses have not helped. (A. E.)

ANSWER:—Various nasal conditions affect the eyes, causing not only pain, but sometimes redness, watering and even from slight irritation, a marked disturbance of vision. Polyp, simple hypertrophied turbinate bodies, and infections of the accessory sinuses of the nose are likely to affect the eyes in one or another of these ways.

Household Hints

FOOD THRIFT.

Making Savings Rather Than Spending Your Social Standing.

Fruit juices for use later in jelly-making can be sterilized and bottled without sugar and made into jellies at the housewife's convenience. This enables her to do with fewer glasses and to distribute her purchase of sugar for jelly-making through the year. Moreover, with the bottled juice she can make a greater variety of jellies, as juices which will not keep can be put up when the fruit is ripe and combined later with fruits that will keep. For example, the juice of strawberries, cherries or pineapple can be kept without sugar, and later, when apples are plentiful, can be made into combination jelly.

From the unsugared sterilized juices of currants, apples, crabapples and grapes, kept from nine to eight months, the bureau of chemistry, United States department of agriculture, recently made jellies of excellent texture, flavor and color.

To put up unsugared fruit juices for jelly-making, proceed exactly as if jelly were to be made at the time. Cook the fruit until they are soft and strain out the juice through a flannel bag. Heat and pour the juice into bottles previously scalded. Fill the bottles full, leaving no air space between juice and cork or seal. Place the filled, sealed bottles on their sides in water near the boiling point and keep them in the bath for that the corked or sealed end is under hot water. As soon as the bottles are cool, cover the cork with a paraffin seal. Through sterilization and sealing are absolutely essential to success.

To make jelly from the sterilized juices, test its jelling quality, add the proper amount of sugar and proceed as in making jelly from freshly pressed juice.

BRANNIES

This is an original "hard times" recipe. Two heaping pints of bran, one heaping pint sugar, one pint sour milk, one egg, one tablespoonful of drippings or butter, one heaping teaspoonful each of soda and baking powder, one-half cupful of coconut, one-half cupful nut meats (almonds preferable), and one-half teaspoon of vanilla.

Cream butter, sugar and egg, stir in all the ingredients except flour and baking powder, which should be sifted together and added last. Drop by spoonfuls two inches apart in pan and bake in moderate oven. This recipe will make six dozen delicious "brannies."

SCALLOPED VEGETABLES.

Vegetables may be scalloped by cutting into cubes, adding sauce, placing in buttered baking dish, covering with buttered crumbs and baking in the oven. Use one part of sauce to two parts of vegetables.

Sauce for vegetables. Three tablespoons flour, teaspoon salt, white pepper, two tablespoons butter, one cup milk, one cup vegetable stock.

MAKES CELERY SALT.

Never throw away celery leaves. When using celery, save the leaves and dry till crisp. Then crush to a powder and mix with an equal amount of salt. This makes a good celery salt.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

(Miss Hoyt will answer personally all letters pertaining to matters of etiquette addressed to her in care of this paper, if accompanied by a two-cent stamp.)

All gifts sent by friends are acknowledged by the bride herself before the wedding day if there be time, so that the very last letter a girl writes and signs with her maiden name are those pretty notes of thanks. They may read as follows if one desires a form, though any expression that comes from the heart will be correct. My Dear Mother, How very kind you are to remember my wedding, and add to my happiness, by sending me so lovely a gift as I have just received from you. It is just what I wanted, and will help to adorn my new home. With love and good wishes, I am, affectionately yours, Miriam Baker.

MRS. B.: The small individual dishes for nuts or candy are gradually going out of fashion. They are being replaced by a luncheon table larger dishes containing these dainties, which are passed, the guests helping themselves. One reason for this probably is the strange and in my opinion, crude custom of giving in some localities of the guests taking the individual holders home with them as souvenirs of the occasion. Small colored paper cases can be used for this purpose, so that the hostess is not sustained by the hostess. However, I have known fancy crocheted baskets, and even silver dishes to be confiscated by avaricious women, without an invitation from the hostess, and to her sorrow and chagrin, have too seen women refrain from eating the contents of these dishes during the luncheon, and even ask their neighbor for theirs. In order that they might take several of them home to their children. This was vulgarly incarnate. One should remove nothing whatever from the table, unless requested by the hostess to do so, excepting the flowers which one sometimes finds laid at each plate.

P. T. N.: you should never lay the seeds of cherries or grapes on the tablecloth. Lay them on your plate.

The Business of Living

Patty Details to Eleanor the Incidents of Her Visit To Fort Benjamin Harrison.

"Oh, Eleanor, it was wonderful, side of it so much!" asked Eleanor, shuddering. "It is the best way. They want the men prepared. If they can not stand it to talk about death they surely can not face it. Bertram says twenty were discharged just last week because they could not measure up to the standard. They were sent home because they were unfit to become soldiers."

"I suppose they were glad to go," said Eleanor. "On the contrary, Bertram says they were very much upset about it. I suppose it is rather a knock-out blow to be told that others can be heroes but you are made of different stuff, that you can not measure up to the standard."

"Would you be glad to have Bertram sent home?" asked Eleanor, after a pause. "No, it is strange, isn't it, when I feel so dreadfully about his going?"

"Well, after breakfast we went out to Fort Benjamin Harrison."

"How far is it from Indianapolis?" "I am no judge of distances. It was a nice little spin. We got there in time to see Company A pass. Eleanor, it gave me a thrill. You know a requirement for membership in that company is height. All men must be six feet tall, and I tell you they are outstanding young fellows in their fine uniforms with their martial bearing. The tears ran down my cheeks as I saw Bertram pass. Of course he did not see me, for they never turn a head, and I seemed to see the place that wives and mothers hold in a war plan. But the strange thing about it was that I did not regret it, as I have always done before. A silence fell between the women. Then in a softer voice Patty resumed:

"They seemed like a noble band of martyrs as with proud steps they marched with faces front; faces turned away from life, away from happiness, away from all they hold most dear, and I—seemed to be marching, too, by his side and to sacrifice because a dear privilege, if only I could march by his side, and share his fate I would do it gladly, but the elation died; the lofty view of the war passed as he faded from view and the thousands of men filed past." Patty wiped her eyes and continued:

"Bertram and young Folks and his cousin, George Snively, came to the tent where we were waiting for the drill to finish, and we all went back to the hotel to dinner. They had leave for the rest of the day. After dinner Bertram and I went off alone. We had so much to say. It may be the last time we ever say a word to each other in this world," continued Patty solemnly.

"Don't dear," pleaded Eleanor. "Why not face the thing as it is." "The bitter tone crept into the young wife's voice. "They do that there. The officers lose no opportunity to make the men meet the condition squarely. They tell them to leave minute directions for the disposal of their bodies and they iterate and reiterate the fact that going to France means in most cases death."

"Why do they dwell on the shady

But I could not bear to have a blow struck at my idol." Patty held up her head, smiling proudly. (To be continued.)

FRENCHMAN'S COOK WAS GERMAN SPY

Paris, June 16.—The equivalent of $20,000 in securities recently was found hidden behind a buffet by a French official who was rearranging the furniture of his apartment. This little fortune was traced to a German cook who was employed by the official and whose excellent attitude since the war began gained for her the privilege of remaining in France. The police made inquiries about her movements recently and she disappeared. The official and his household guests were well pleased to acquire confidential information regarding the national defense. This fact and the discovery of her unsuspected wealth led to the suspicion that the cook might have been in communication with the enemy. The fortune has been sequestered.

Boiled Pork.—Put the joint of pork into a large stewpan and cover it with warm water. Bring this to a boil, remove the scum that rises, and boil for ten minutes. Add an onion and a carrot (cut small), with a dozen peppercorns, and simmer till the meat is done. If the pork is very salt, put it on in cold water instead of hot. Any joint of pork can be cooked in this way. (Eat slowly and live longer.)

The Real Adventure

A NOVEL

By Henry Kitchell Webster

(Copyright 1916, The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

According to Violet Williamson's account, given confidentially in the drawing-room afterward, it was really Hermione's fault. "She just wouldn't let Rodney alone—would keep talking about crimes and Lombroso and psychiatric laboratories—I'll bet she'd got hold of a paper of his somewhere and read it. Anyway, at last she said, 'I believe Doctor Randolph would agree with me.' He was talking to me then, but maybe that isn't why she did it. Well, and Rodney straightened up and said, 'Is that Randolph, the alienist?' You see he hadn't caught his name when they were introduced. And that's how it started. Hermione was game—I'll admit that. She listened and kept looking interested, and every now and then said something. Sometimes they'd take the trouble to smile and say 'Yes, indeed!'—politely, you know, but other times they wouldn't pay any attention at all, just roll along over her and smash her flat—like what's his name—Juganaut."

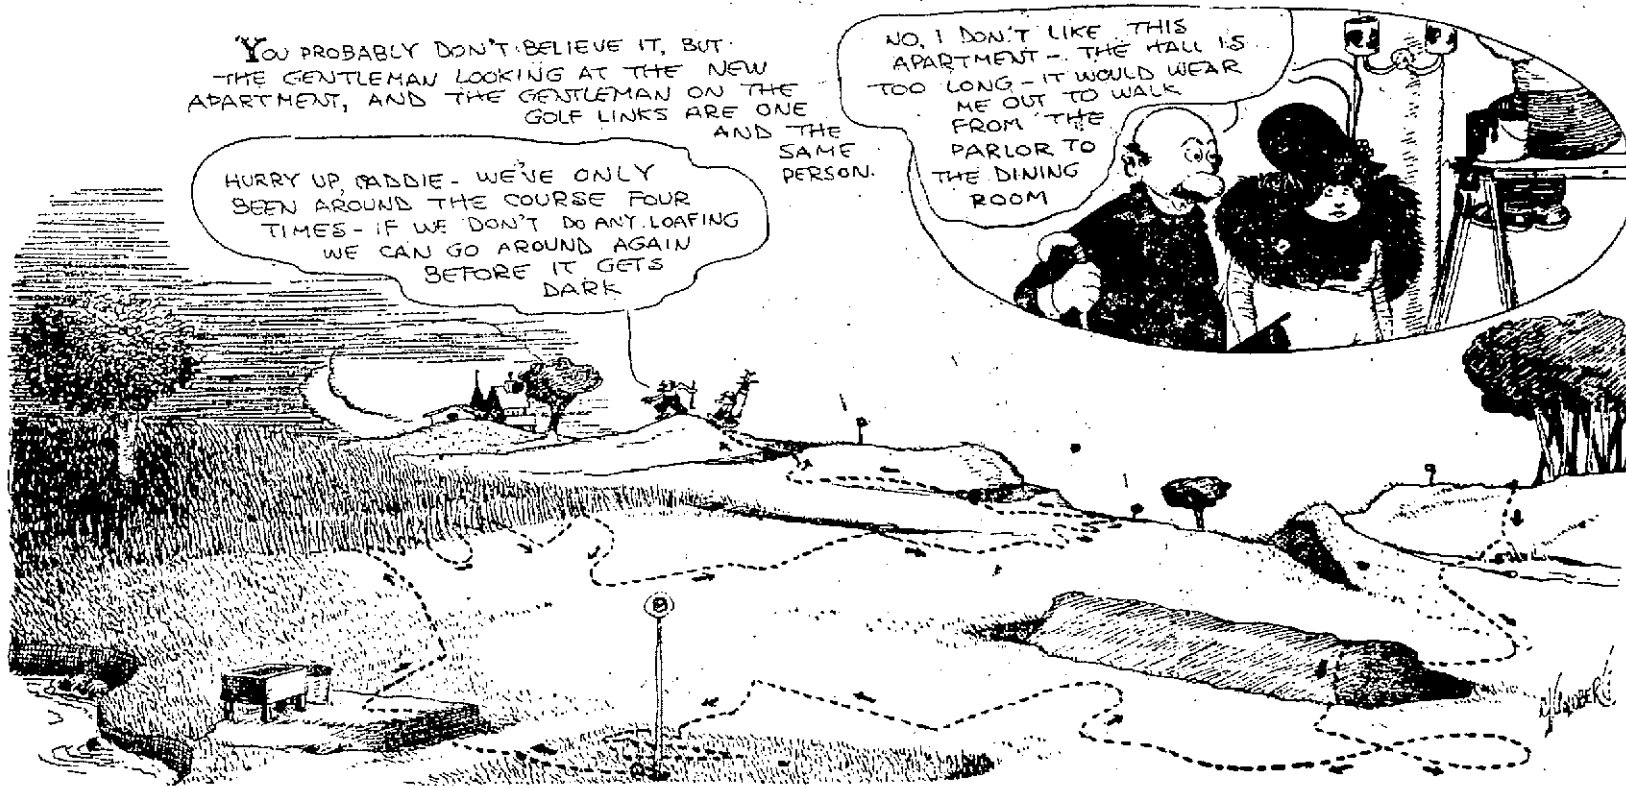

"You don't need to tell me that," said Frederica. "All I didn't know was how it started. Didn't I sit there and watch for a mortal hour, not able to do a thing? I tried to signal to Martin, but of course he wasn't on site to me, and—"

"He did all he could, really," Violet assured her. "I told him to go to the rescue, and he did, bravely. But what with Hermione being so miffy about getting frozen out, and Martin himself being so interested in what they were shouting at each other—because it was frightfully interesting, you know, if you don't have to pretend you understood it—why, there wasn't much he could do."

In the light of this disaster, she was rather glad the men lingered in the dining-room as long as they did—glad that Hermione had ordered her car for ten and took the odd girl with her. She made no effort to resist the departure of the others, with reasonable promptitude, in their train. When, after the front door had closed for the last time, Martin released a long yawn, she told him to run along to bed; she wanted to talk to Rodney, who was to spend the night while his own clothes were drying out in the laundry.

"Good night, old chap," said Martin in a voice of lively commiseration. "I'm glad I'm not in for what you are." Rodney found a pipe, sat down, ascended a spinning little chair, settled his elbows comfortably on the back of it, and then asked his sister what Martin had meant—what was he in for? Frederica, curled up in a corner of "Listening, are ye?" exclaimed the master; "then ye're listening wi' one ear an' eating that tart wi' the other!"

The Gazette—My 1916 Ford develops a considerable hum when the car is in gear, and also upon accelerating from about ten to fifteen miles per hour, not being noticeable back or above those speeds. By speeding car up and then throttling down and listening closely, one may detect a kind of relaxed "whang-whang," as speed is decreased.

HELPFUL HINTS.

Do not fasten chains too tightly nor to a spoke. Many a tire has been ruined by disregarding this advice. If a chain can creep it will wear the tire evenly. If it is fastened so that it cannot creep the chains will wear in one place and the shoe is damaged.

A source of noise that is frequently overlooked is the case of covering the timing gears. It should be kept filled with lubricant, but if it becomes empty it acts as a sounding board and intensifies the noise of the gears.

Do not neglect a slight leak in the gasline line because it is not leaking very fast. The vapor, being colorless, accumulates without your seeing it, and a disastrous fire may result. If tightening the joints does not stop the leak rub some soap in the threads.

You probably carry two spare tubes to be used in an emergency, but occasionally a motorist has three or more punctures on one trip. So keep your spare kit supplied with sandpaper, cement, patches of tire putty, and a clean cloth. And don't forget a blow-out patch and a tire sleeve.

Your dealer will show you how to roll the air out of a tube and fold it properly, but if it is left too long in a folded condition it will crack. So open it occasionally and fold another way. If this is not done the tube will become almost useless.

The case and washed same thoroughly with kerosene. There was not the least bit of grit in the oil grease I took care of, so I am still at sea. Would be very thankful for any advice you can give to aid me in overcoming this trouble. F. M. S. As you seem to have done everything else, the trouble must be with the chain. Get a good one, the best on the market, as it will be found to be the cheapest in the end. It is also advisable to replace sprocket if badly worn.

Motorist Department. The Gazette—Will you please tell me what the trouble is with my Ford Model 8? It runs fine on low speed and all times, and occasionally does on high speed, but when I slow down and want her to pick up she seems to miss and lose speed, until finally I have to put her in low to keep her from stalling. When car is jerked up in the yard it runs fine on high. Compression is good, new carburetor on, makes contract on just in time. A master vibrator on. Batteries are over 20. Gasoline is clean. Don't seem to have any pulling power on high speed. Manifold does not leak. When I take the plugs out they are in good shape, spark all right. Kindly advise me what you think the trouble is. J. H.

Your trouble would seem to be slipping high speed clutch. Try adjusting fingers until the clutch holds properly. Sometimes the trouble you mention is due to spark being too far advanced. Try retarding the spark and listening for a knock. This would be a sure indication of too much advance.

Elgin Six

"The Car of the Hour."

Any Man or Woman

can see at a glance that the Elgin Six is not a "cheap Six," but a thoroughly high-grade car, handsome in design, splendid in performance, and equal in every respect to cars selling for two to four hundred dollars more money.

No photograph of the Elgin Six can do it justice. You must see the actual car, and ride in it, to know how roomy and comfortable it is, how steadily and easily it rides.

The mechanical construction is of the highest standard, from the powerful 35 h. p. six-cylinder valve-in-head motor to the smallest detail. Punctured in it once, and you will appreciate its power, speed and control.

The true yacht line body, with the fashionable European center cowl, lends a beauty to Elgin design that never has been duplicated. Yet neither comfort nor ease has been sacrificed to beauty, and there is more comfort and "leg room" in the Elgin than you'd expect to find even in a larger car.

Let us tell you about the new records made by the Elgin Six on long tours, and how it has stood the most crucial tests for reliability and economy of operation. Let us explain to you the improved rear-spring suspension and the Elgin valve-acting clutch—a mechanical improvement that makes it safe and easy for a woman to drive a car.

CORB LEADS HITTERS IN A. L. FIRST TIME SINCE AUGUST, 1916

Chicago, June 16.—For the first time since August, 1916, Ty Cobb is leading the American league in batting.
